FOREWORD

This is the fourth edition of the Labour Department's annual compilation of data on collective agreement expirations. The information is prepared for use in the Department's planning and research work, and is made available to the public because of its extensive interest in the volume of bargaining activity.

The format of the 1971 report is almost identical to that used in 1970. The only change of consequence appears in Table 10 where expiring construction agreements are listed by major urban centre rather than by economic region.

The cut-off date for including data in the main tables of the report was November 10th, 1970. Unless an agreement had been filed with the Department's Collective Agreements Library by that date it was not reported in Tables 1 to 11. However, an appendix lists agreements expiring in 1971 that came to the Department's attention between the cut-off date and early December when the report was printed. Agreements expiring in 1971 will continue to be made well into the new year and will be identified on supplementary lists that will be made available as these agreements come to the attention of the Library.

The report was prepared from the Library's records. The planning and supervisory work was done by Len Haywood and Agnes Gesing; many members of the Research and Systems and A.D.P. Branches participated in the preparation of the data, and the Administrative Operations Branch handled the printing.

John Kinley,
DIRECTOR, RESEARCH BRANCH.

December 1970.

INTRODUCTION

This report describes the extent of bargaining likely to arise in Ontario during 1971 from the termination of collective agreements. It is based on information available in the records of the Department's Collective Agreements Library as of November 10, 1970.

The records show that 4,030 agreements will terminate in Ontario during 1971; of these 1,523 are in the construction industry and the remaining 2,507 apply to bargaining units in forestry, mining, manufacturing, transportation and utilities, trade, finance, services, and public administration. The expiring agreements comprise about 45 per cent of the 9,000 current bargaining situations recorded by the Library.

The report gives a substantially complete picture of the bargaining that will occur in Ontario during 1971 except for situations that will result from certification and voluntary recognition. A few agreements that will expire in 1971 could not be included in the report because settlements had not been reached when data collection was completed. Experience shows that approximately 300 such agreements will come to the Department's attention during the next few months and that most of them will cover relatively few employees. Forty-five of these late agreements were obtained by the Library during November and December and are listed in an Appendix appearing in this document. Supplementary lists will be compiled by the Library during the year and will be made available on request.

The number of employees affected by expiring agreements is shown only for industries other than construction. A total of 263,629 employees are affected by the 2,507 non-construction agreements. Of these employees, 167,627 are in manufacturing establishments, and 96,002 in forestry, mining, transportation, communication and utilities, trade, finance, services, and public administration. The number of employees in the manufacturing and non-manufacturing industries covered by the 2,507 agreements expiring in 1971 is lower than the number of employees covered by the 2,279 agreements that expired in 1970. This results, in part, from the fact that only 28 agreements covering more than 1,000 employees will expire in 1971, compared to 58 that fell into this category in 1970.

The number of employees covered by the expiring construction agreements is not reported as it is not yet fully available in the Department's records.

The body of the report is comprised of eleven tables. Eight of these are in Part I and present data on agreements pertaining to industries other than construction; the remaining three in Part II refer to the construction industry. The data, which are mainly in terms of numbers of agreements and numbers of employees, are presented in such a way as to highlight the concentration of agreement expirations by month, industry, union, geographic area, and bargaining unit size. In addition, some tables specify individual employers and the types of bargaining units to which the agreements apply. A brief description of each of the tables is given in the following paragraphs.

TABLES - INDUSTRIES OTHER THAN CONSTRUCTION

Table 1 is a summary statement of the data presented by month and industry. It is in two sections - Section A referring to agreements, and Section B to employees. The Table gives users of the report quick answers to general questions, such as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year? Also, the Table shows the percentage distribution of the total number of agreements expiring and the number of employees affected by industry and month.

Table 2 lists the expiring agreements alphabetically by employer name for each month of 1971. In addition, it shows the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage, and location of each agreement. Three of these items - industry, union, and bargaining unit - are identified by codes defined later in this Introduction.

Table 3 shows the expiring agreements classified into the major industry groups of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and arranged alphabetically by month of expiry within these groups. The Table gives all the information mentioned in the paragraph above describing Table 2, except that agreements covering fewer than twenty-five employees are reported as a total in the final entry under each major group heading of the code. For the full year, the total of such agreements is 1,044, and they cover 10,521 employees. These numbers represent approximately 42 per cent of all non-construction agreements expiring but only 4 per cent of the total number of employees covered.

Table 4 is a simple listing by union and industry of the numbers of expiring agreements and employees they cover.

Table 5 presents the data on numbers of agreements and employees by industry and economic region of Ontario.

Table 6 is a distribution of expiring agreements by major urban centres in Ontario.

Table 7 is entitled "Collective Bargaining Agreements Expiring in 1971, Distribution by Bargaining Unit Size and Industry".

Table 8 lists seven Treasury Board of Canada agreements expiring in 1971 by union and bargaining unit. These agreements are not included in the other tables comprising this Part because most are Canada-wide, and the number of employees they cover in Ontario was not available.

TABLES - CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Part II of the report provides information on agreement expirations in the construction industry. More than 1,500 such agreements will terminate in 1971, but the information in the tables is on only 204 major contracts in this industry. Of these 204 contracts, 164 are with formal construction associations or groups of individual employers not comprising an association, and the remaining 40 are "standard" agreements, that is, several contracts with identical provisions signed by individual employers. The data on the 204 agreements are shown alphabetically by employer or employer association and month of expiration in Table 9; by major centre in Table 10; and by union in Table 11.

DEFINITIONS AND CODES

The terms and codes used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:

- In Tables 2, 3, 9, and 10, and in the Appendix, each agreement is identified by employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one or two-word description of the operation or bargaining units to which they apply. Also, the terms 'Inter-City' or 'Inter-Region' are used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.
- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the Division, Major Group and Class of Industry established by the Manual. In Table 2 and in the Appendix, the industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C'. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages to . In other tables, the industry is identified by the actual title used in the Manual.

- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2 and 3, and in the Appendix, and by name in others where such identification is required. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages and .
- Wherever it occurs, the table heading, 'Number of Employees', indicates the number in the bargaining unit. This employee data was obtained either from the employer or union at the time the agreement was filed with the Library.
- The term 'Unit' used in a table heading refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The unit codes and their definitions are as follows:

Unit Code	Definition
01	Production and Related Employees: Includes employees performing production or maintenance work. Characteristic occupations are assembler, inspector, maintenance trades, janitor, watchman, warehouseman, etc., and also includes driver-salesmen and plant clerical workers.
02	Office and Clerical Employees: Includes typists, file clerks, business machine operators, and other occupations normally designated as office and clerical classifications, excluding plant clerical workers.
03	Technical Employees: Includes draftsmen, laboratory technicians, engineering technicians, and other occupations normally designated as technical.
04	Professional Employees: Includes nurses, teachers, newspaper editors, reporters, writers (stage, screen, radio, and television), musicians and other performing artists, engineers, chemists and other occupations normally designated as professional.

Unit Code	Definition
05	Sales Employees: Includes employees selling goods and services such as car salesmen, insurance salesmen, department store and food store employees and other occupations related to sales work, but excludes driver-salesmen.

FOREWORD

This is the fifth edition of the Labour Department's annual compilation of data on collective agreement expirations. The information is prepared for use in the Department's planning and research work, and is made available to the public because of its extensive interest in the volume of bargaining activity. The source of the information is agreements held in the Department's Collective Agreements Library. The format of the 1972 report is identical to that used in 1971.

The cut-off date for including data in the main tables of the report was November 15th, 1971. Unless an agreement had been filed with the Department's Collective Agreements Library by that date it was not reported in Tables 1 to 11. However, agreements expiring in 1972 will continue to be made well into the new year and will be identified on supplementary lists that will be made available as these agreements come to the attention of the Library.

The planning and supervisory work was done by Len Haywood and Agnes Gesing; many members of the Research and Systems and A.D.P. Branches participated in the preparation of the data, and the Administrative Operations Branch handled the printing.

John Kinley,
DIRECTOR, RESEARCH BRANCH,

December 1971

INTRODUCTION

This report describes the extent of bargaining likely to arise in Ontario during 1972 from the termination of collective agreements. It is based on information available in the records of the Department's Collective Agreements Library as of November 15, 1971.

The records show that 2,327 agreements in industries other than construction will terminate in Ontario during 1972. The major industries involved are mining, primary metals, retail trade, electrical products, transportation and clothing. These 2,327 agreements comprise about 40 per cent of the 5,780 current bargaining situations in non-construction industries recorded by the Library.

The records also show that 92 major agreements in the construction industry will terminate during 1972. These agreements comprise about 29 per cent of the 323 major construction agreements on file in the Library.

The report gives a substantially complete picture of the extent of bargaining that will occur in Ontario during 1972 except for situations that will result from certification and voluntary recognition. However, a few agreements that will expire in 1972 could not be included in the report because settlements had not been reached when data collection was completed. Experience shows that approximately 300 such agreements will come to the Department's attention during the next few months and that most of them will cover relatively few employees. An appendix to this report lists the first of these late agreements obtained by the library during November and early December. Additional supplementary lists will be compiled by the Library during the year and will be made available on request.

The number of employees affected by expiring agreements is shown only for industries other than construction. A total of 324,059 employees are affected by these agreements. Of these employees, 162,695 are in manufacturing establishments, and 161,364 in forestry, mining, transportation, communication and utilities, trade, finance, services and public administration. The number of employees covered by the 2,327 agreements expiring in 1972 is 60,426 larger than the number affected by the 2,507 agreements that expired in 1971. This results, in part, from the fact that 37 agreements covering more than 1,000 employees will expire in 1972 compared to 28 that fell into this category in 1971.

The number of employees covered by the expiring construction agreements is not reported as it is not yet fully available in the Department's records.

The body of the report is comprised of eleven tables. Eight of these are in Part I and present data on agreements pertaining to industries other than construction; the remaining three in Part II refer to the construction industry. The data, which are mainly in terms of numbers of agreements and numbers of employees, are presented in such a way as to highlight the concentration of agreement expirations by month, industry, union, geographic area, and bargaining unit size. In addition, some tables specify individual employers and the types of bargaining units to which the agreements apply. A brief description of each of the tables is given in the following paragraphs.

TABLES - INDUSTRIES OTHER THAN CONSTRUCTION

Table 1 is a summary statement of the data presented by month and industry. It is in two sections - Section A referring to agreements, and Section B to employees. The Table gives users of the report quick answers to general questions, such as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year? Also, the Table shows the percentage distribution of the total number of agreements expiring and the number of employees affected by industry and month.

Table 2 lists the expiring agreements alphabetically by employer name for each month of 1972. In addition, it shows the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage, and location of each agreement. Three of these items - industry, union and bargaining unit - are identified by codes defined later in this introduction.

Table 3 shows the expiring agreements classified into the major industry groups of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and arranged alphabetically by month of expiry within these groups. The Table gives all the information mentioned in the paragraph above describing Table 2, except that agreements covering fewer than twenty-five employees are reported as a total in the final entry under each major group heading of the code. For the full year, the total of such agreements is 942, and they cover 9,649 employees. These numbers represent approximately 40 per cent of all non-construction agreements expiring but only 3 per cent of the total number of employees covered.

Table 4 is a simple listing by union and industry of the numbers of expiring agreements and employees they cover.

Table 5 presents the data on numbers of agreements and employees by industry and economic region of Ontario.

Table 6 is a distribution of expiring agreements by major urban centres in Ontario.

Table 7 is entitled "Collective Bargaining Agreements Expiring in 1972, Distribution by Bargaining Unit Size and Industry".

Table 8 lists seven Treasury Board of Canada agreements expiring in 1972 by union and bargaining unit. These agreements are not included in the other tables comprising this Part because most are Canada-wide, and the number of employees they cover in Ontario was not available.

TABLES - CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Part II of the report provides information on the 92 major construction agreements that will terminate during 1972. Of these agreements, 73 are with formal construction associations or groups of individual employers not comprising an association, and the remaining 19 are "standard" agreements, that is, several contracts with identical provisions signed by individual employers. The data on the 92 agreements are shown alphabetically by employer or employer association and month of expiration in Table 9; by major centre in Table 10; and by union in Table 11.

DEFINITIONS AND CODES

The terms and codes used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:

- In Tables 2, 3, 9 and 10, and in the Appendix, each agreement is identified by employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one or two-word description of the operation or bargaining units to which they apply. Also, the terms 'Inter-City' or 'Inter-Region' are used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.
- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the Division, Major Group and Class of Industry established by the Manual. In Table 2 and in the Appendix, the industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C.'. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages 6 to 11. In other tables, the industry is identified by the actual title used in the Manual.

- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2 and 3, and in the Appendix, and by name in others where such identification is required. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages 12 and 13.
- Wherever it occurs, the table heading, 'Number of Employees', indicates the number in the bargaining unit. This employee data was obtained either from the employer or union at the time the agreement was filed with the Library.
- The term 'Unit' used in a table heading refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The unit codes and their definitions are as follows:

Unit Code	Definition
01	Production and Related Employees: Includes employees performing production or maintenance work. Characteristic occupations are assembler, inspector, maintenance trades, janitor, watchman, warehouseman etc., and also includes driver-salesmen and plant clerical workers.
02	Office and Clerical Employees: Includes typists, file clerks, business machine operators, and other occupations normally designated as office and clerical classifications, excluding plant clerical workers.
03	Technical Employees: Includes draftsmen, laboratory technicians, engineering technicians and other occupations normally designated as technical.
04	Professional Employees: Includes nurses, teachers, newspaper editors, reporters, writers (stage, screen, radio, and television), musicians and other performing artists, engineers, chemists and other occupations normally designated as professional.
05	Sales Employees: Includes employees selling goods and services such as car salesmen, insurance salesmen,

FOREWORD

This is the sixth edition of the Labour Ministry's annual compilation of data on collective agreement expirations in Ontario. The information is primarily prepared for use in the Ministry's planning and research work, and it is published because of extensive public interest in the volume of bargaining activity. The source of the information is agreements held in the Ministry's Collective Agreements Library.

The cut-off date for including data in the report was November 24, 1972. If an agreement had not been filed with the Library by that time it is not reported in Tables 1 to 11. However, agreements that will expire in 1973 will continue to be made well into the new year. As these agreements come to the attention of the Collective Agreements Library they will be made available to users of the report on supplementary lists.

The only significant change in the format of the report from last year is that expiring agreements to which the Treasury Board of Canada is a party are no longer listed in a separate table. In this report they are included in Tables 2 and 3.

Len Haywood and Agnes Gesing of the Research Branch staff did the planning and supervisory work necessary for compiling the document. However, many members of the Research and Systems and A.D.P. Branches participated in preparing the data, and among these people the Collective Agreements Library staff, Dolly Lyn, Freda Johnston, Brenda Long and Betty-Jean Cook deserve special mention. They collected the agreements on which the document is based and did most of the coding necessary to extract information from them.

John Kinley,
DIRECTOR, RESEARCH BRANCH.

December 1972

INTRODUCTION

This report describes the extent of bargaining likely to arise in Ontario during 1973 from the termination of collective agreements. It is based on information available in the records of the Ministry's Collective Agreements Library as of November 24, 1971.

The records show that 2,468 agreements in industries other than construction will terminate in Ontario during 1973. They comprise about 40 per cent of the 6,039 current bargaining situations in non-construction industries recorded by the Library. The major industries affected by the expiring agreements include food and beverages, paper and allied products; printing and publishing, metal fabricating, transportation, equipment, electrical products, wholesale and retail trade, education and health and welfare services, and federal and local governments.

The records also show that 228 major agreements in the construction industry will terminate during 1973. These agreements comprise about 75 per cent of the 304 major construction agreements on file in the Library.

The report gives a substantially complete picture of the extent of bargaining that will occur in Ontario during 1973, except for situations that will result from certification and voluntary recognition. However, a few agreements that will expire in 1973 could not be included in the report because settlements had not been reached when data collection was completed. Experience shows that approximately 300 such agreements will come to the Ministry's attention during the next few months and that most of them will cover relatively few employees. Supplementary lists of these late agreements will be compiled by the Library during the year and will be made available on request.

A total of 365,857 employees are affected by the agreements expiring in industries other than construction, compared with 324,059 in 1972. Of these, 186,117 are in manufacturing, and 179,740 are in the non-manufacturing. Of the total employees, 153,902 are covered by 37 major agreements - those applying to 1,000 or more employees. In 1972, there were 125,895 employees covered by the same number of major agreements.

The number of employees covered by the expiring construction agreements is 73,610.

The body of the report is comprised of ten tables. Seven of these are in Part I and present data on agreements pertaining to industries other than construction; the remaining three, in Part II, refer to the construction industry. The data, which are mainly in terms of numbers of agreements and numbers of employees, are presented in such a way as to highlight the concentration of agreement expirations by month, industry, union, geographic area, and bargaining unit size. In addition, some tables specify individual employers and the types of bargaining units to which the agreements apply. A brief description of each of the tables is given in the following paragraphs.

TABLES - INDUSTRIES OTHER THAN CONSTRUCTION

Table 1 is a summary statement of the data presented by month and industry. It is in two sections - Section A referring to agreements, and Section B to employees. The Table gives users of the report quick answers to general questions, such as: How many agreements expire in each month in an industry? How many employees are affected by these agreements? In what industries will bargaining be concentrated during the year? What is the pattern of agreement expiry over the year? Also, the Table shows the percentage distribution of the total number of agreements expiring and the number of employees affected by industry and month.

Table 2 lists the expiring agreements alphabetically by employer name for each month of 1973. In addition, it shows the industry, union, type of bargaining unit, employee coverage, and location of each agreement. Three of these items - industry, union and bargaining unit - are identified by codes defined later in this introduction.

Table 3 shows the expiring agreements classified into the major industry groups of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and arranged alphabetically by month of expiry within these groups. The Table gives all the information mentioned in the paragraph above describing Table 2, except that agreements covering fewer than twenty-five employees are reported as a total in the final entry under each major group heading of the code. For the full year, the total of such agreements is 1,028, and they cover 10,364 employees. These numbers represent approximately 42 per cent of all non-construction agreements expiring but only 3 per cent of the total number of employees covered.

Table 4 is a simple listing by union and industry of the numbers of expiring agreements and employees they cover.

Table 5 presents the data on numbers of agreements and employees by industry and economic region of Ontario.

Table 6 is a distribution of expiring agreements by major urban centres in Ontario.

TABLES - CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Part II of the report provides information on the 228 major construction agreements that will terminate during 1973. Of these agreements, 185 are with formal construction associations or groups of individual employers not comprising an association, and the remaining 43 are "standard" agreements, that is, several contracts with identical provisions signed by individual employers. The data on the 228 agreements are shown alphabetically by employer or employer association and month of expiration in Table 8; by major centre in Table 9, and by union in Table 10.

DEFINITIONS AND CODES

The terms and codes used in the tables are generally self-explanatory. However, a few definitions seem to be required and are given below:

- In Tables 2, 3, 8 and 9 each agreement is identified by employer name. Where the employer has more than one agreement at one location, the agreements are distinguished by a one or two-word description of the operation or bargaining units to which they apply. Also, the terms 'Inter-City' or 'Inter-Region' are used to identify agreements that cover employees in three or more locations.
- The industry classification used is that set out in the 1960 edition of the Standard Industrial Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The agreements are classified according to the Division, Major Group and Class of Industry established by the Manual. In Table 2 and in the Appendix, the industry class of each agreement is given by a code number under the heading 'S.I.C.'. The code was determined by the Department's Collective Agreements Library using the Manual and information about the activities of the employer. A key to the industry codes is shown at the end of this Introduction on pages 6 to 11. In other tables, the industry is identified by the actual title used in the Manual.
- The union party to each agreement is identified by code numbers in Tables 2 and 3, and in the Appendix, and by name in others where such identification is required. The codes used were developed by the Canada Department of Labour, and are listed against the unions they identify on pages 12 and 13.

- Wherever it occurs, the table heading, 'Number of Employees', indicates the number in the bargaining unit. This employee data was obtained either from the employer or union at the time the agreement was filed with the Library.
- The term 'Unit' used in a table heading refers to the type of bargaining unit covered by the agreement. The unit codes and their definitions are as follows:

Unit Code	Definition
01	Production and Related Employees : Includes employees performing production or maintenance work. Characteristic occupations are assembler, inspector, maintenance trades, janitor, watchman, warehouseman etc., and also includes driver-salesmen and plant clerical workers.
02	Office and Clerical Employees : Includes typists, file clerks, business machine operators, and other occupations normally designated as office and clerical classifications, excluding plant clerical workers.
03	Technical Employees : Includes draftsmen, laboratory technicians, engineering technicians and other occupations normally designated as technical.
04	Professional Employees : Includes nurses, teachers, newspaper editors, reporters, writers (stage, screen, radio, and television), musicians and other performing artists, engineers, chemists and other occupations normally designated as professional.
05	Sales Employees : Includes employees selling goods and services such as car salesmen, insurance salesmen, department store and food store employees and other occupations related to sales work, but excludes driver-salesmen.

ONTARIO COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT EXPIRATIONS, 1973

The Ministry of Labour's sixth annual survey of Ontario collective agreement expirations shows 2,696 contracts terminating during 1973. This total figure is comprised of 2,468 agreements in industries other than construction and 228 pattern-setting construction contracts. The number of non-construction contracts terminating is 141 greater than in 1972 and represents approximately 41 per cent of the total held in the Ministry's Collective Agreements Library. The 228 expiring construction contracts is 136 more than in the preceding year and represents 75 per cent of the pattern-setting agreements in this industry.

The agreements expiring in 1973 cover approximately 440,000 Ontario workers; a figure that is roughly half of the total union membership in the Province. Nearly 366,000 of these workers are in industries other than construction, compared to 324,000 that were in this broad category in 1972. In the construction industry, 74,000 workers are covered by the 228 expiring contracts. Accordingly, 1973 will be a very heavy year for construction bargaining and relatively large numbers of workers will be negotiating agreements in other industries.

Activity by Industry

The 2,468 non-construction agreements expiring are almost equally divided between manufacturing and other sectors, with 1,260 in the former category and 1,208 in the latter. This approximately equal division also applies in terms of employee coverage, with 186,000 workers being affected in the manufacturing sector and 180,000 in non-manufacturing.

In terms of employees affected, manufacturing bargaining will be dominated by the transportation equipment industry where contracts affecting more than 56,000 workers will open during the year. A very large majority of these workers are employees of the three major automobile makers and they are mainly represented by the United Automobile Workers. Other manufacturing industries in which agreements affecting more than 15,000 workers will expire are paper, foods and beverages, and electrical products. Especially marked differences in the number of employees that will be bargaining in 1973 as compared to 1972 appear in the primary metal and transportation equipment industries. In the former the 1973 figure of about 5,000 workers compares to 30,000 a year ago, and in the latter the situation is reversed, with 56,000 bargaining in 1973, compared to 9,000 a year earlier (See Table 1).

Bargaining will be particularly widespread in the construction industry. Almost every aspect of the industry will be affected in nearly every major centre in the Province. However, a particularly heavy concentration of this bargaining activity will be in the Toronto area.

Other non-manufacturing bargaining will be concentrated in public administration, education and health services. Approximately 55,000 workers will negotiate agreements with the Federal Treasury Board and upwards of 31,000 with local governments. In addition, more than 15,000 employees engaged in educational activities and 22,000 in health and welfare will have their agreements expire. Table 1 shows that only one other industry in the non-manufacturing sector approaches these four areas in terms of employees involved in 1973 bargaining, that is, retail trade, where more than 15,000 workers will be attempting to renegotiate their labour contracts.

Activity by Month

The usual pattern of Ontario agreement expirations concentrating in relatively few months is repeated in 1973. One hundred and ninety-five or 85 per cent of the 228 construction agreements opening during the year will terminate in April. These April terminations cover 65,700 or 89 per cent of the construction employees who will bargain.

In industries other than construction, the greatest number of expirations, 565, will occur in December (See Table 2). This number is 23 per cent of the year's total, and heavy contributors to it are local government with 132 contract terminations and health and welfare services with 80. More than 200 non-construction agreements expire in only three other months, March, April and June; the pulp and paper industry accounts for a substantial number of the April terminations. For the remaining eight months the numbers of expiries range from 110 in July to 174 in May. Termination of the major car manufacturer contracts occurs in September, but those in other industries that contribute heavily to the total number of employees bargaining (for example, foods and beverages, electrical products, government and health services) are spread throughout the year.

Major Agreements

Table 3 shows that 50 agreements covering 1,000 or more workers will expire during 1973. Thirty-seven of these affecting 153,902 workers are in industries other than construction, and the remaining 13 cover 27,440 workers in the construction industry.

Eight of the 50 bargaining units cover 5,000 or more employees with the six largest being in the automobile industry and Government of Canada. The largest bargaining unit shown in the construction industry covers 4,800 workers and is under an agreement between the Mechanical Contractors' Association of Toronto and the Plumbers' Union.
